

My color is gold. This represents people who are parental, follow the rules, are dependable, responsible, keep to schedule, are good at decision making and value relationships. I agree that I possess several of these qualities, however, I do not feel like I am on time every time, and while I am organized and neat at school, I am quite messy at home. I feel I am a mix of colors. I am curious, intelligent, and get frustrated when people don't get things right away like me. I also need people who will listen to me as I listen to them, and I need support. I feel I change in a person's eyes as they get to know me. To someone I just met, they would perceive me as a quiet, shy, keep to myself kind of person, but once you break down my boundaries I am actually quite loud and crazy. I feel that understanding myself better will help me find a future career that is right for me. I would like a warm and welcoming environment that is organized, but I also want to be able to use my problem solving skills and curiosity to learn new things. I have thought about going into accounting which i think will be the perfect match. It requires problem solving skills, but also helps people at the same time. I will be able to use my intelligence and will always have something new learn in this career.
